For many students, summer is a time for family vacations, new friendships, new adventures in camps and summer learning programs, or taking summer classes to catch up or get ahead in school. For families, affordable summer programs and camps can be a lifeline.

Yet, for families in Boston, unmet demand for summer programs is high. In 2019, nearly 15,000 children would have been enrolled in a program if one were available to them.

Boston children are taking part in a wide variety of summer experiences, with parents giving programs top marks

In Boston, 17,792 children (24%) participated in a structured summer experience in 2019, which includes summer learning programs, sports programs, summer camps, summer school, summer jobs, or internships. Among Boston families, 60% report that at least one child was in a summer learning program, greater than both the state (53%) and national average (47%). Parents report that they were pleased with their child’s 2019 summer experience, with 89% of Boston parents reporting satisfaction.

About the survey

America After 3PM is a national survey of parents or guardians of school-aged children, screening 31,055 households and having 14,393 households completing in-depth interviews via an online survey using a blend of national consumer panels. At least 200 households completed interviews in every state and Washington D.C., between January 27 and March 17, 2020. Where the minimum could not be met, supplemental telephone interviews were conducted. A total of 29,595 households, including 53,287 children, were surveyed and answered questions regarding ways in which their child or children were cared for during the summer of 2019. Data was collected by Edge Research on behalf of the Afterschool Alliance. The percentages and projected numbers in America After 3PM are based on survey responses from parents. In Boston, 127 households and 223 children were screened for this study. Child-level statewide projections and total school enrollment numbers are based on U.S. Census Bureau, American Community Survey 2018 5-Year Estimates. Total school enrollment for Boston is 74,975.
